An Enterprising Citizen.

To the Herald.

The numerous resacas throughout the county are now filled with water, and it is a great boon to the many poor small farmers along the banks, as the greater part of our garden truck is grown along the banks of these resacas. The great scarcity and poor quality of vegetables in our market for some time past is due to the fact that these resacas have been dry. With an abundance of water, however, we shall soon observe a marked improvement in our vegetables market.

Many have resorted to dam building in the resacas in order to enable them to hold large reservoirs of water that would otherwise run back into the river and on to the sea. Prominent among these is our enterprising townsman, Mr. H. M. Field, who has built two large substantial dams with sluice ways to conduct the surplus water back into the resacas.

Mr. Field has also cut a ditch across the county road above and just outside the city limits where he has constructed a substantial brick bridge over the ditch and graded the approaches, making a much needed improvement in that part of the public highway. Mr. Field is one of our most enterprising citizens as his many improvements about the city prove. He does not stand on the order of doing, but does at once, and he reaps a golden reward.

GRAND OFFER.

Judge McCormick's Decision.
The first answer which greeted the Rambler's ears yesterday as he asked for news at the different railroad offices, was, "The railroad commission is busted."

The report of Judge McCormick's decision, as telegraphed from Dallas, spread like wildfire and it was on the tongue of every one.

No one seemed to know the exact purport of the decision, but it was sufficient for the railroad men to know that any opinion had been rendered against the commission bill.

It was not long before there was shown on the streets, gotten up by some artist, a cut representing a tombstone with the following inscription:

"Railroad Commission of Texas. Died at city of Dallas, August 22, 1892. Requiescat in pace. 'I came, I saw, I blundered.' J. H. Reagan."
—Houston Post.
